A Monster Telescope.

The principal bequest of the late James Lick, of California, was $700,000, to be devoted to the purchase of land, and to putting upon the same a telescope, superior and more powerful to any yet made, besides all the necessary machinery, together with a suitable observatory connected therewith. In order that it may be made useful in the promotion of astronomical research, it was stipulated in the will of the deceased philanthropist that upon its completion it should be transferred to the State, to be known as "The Lick Astronomical Department of the University of California." The contract for construction of the achromatic astronomical object glass, having thirty-six inches clear aperture, was let to the firm of Alvan Clark & Sons, of Cam-bridgeport, (Mass.) in January, 1881, for the sum of $50,000, $12,000 of which was paid on signing. The glass is deliverable at Cambridgeport on or before November 1, 1883.

The La-De-Dah Young Men.

A New York fashion writer says:
"Isn't it odd how things go concurrently to extremes in male and female dress?
Just now, while the belles are pinioning and pressing our arms, the beaux are doing about the same to our little legs.
New trousers are made on astonishing meager lines, and old ones cut down.
I don't know how it is in Ohio, but here in New York the young men's legs run thin and irregular."

This statement is based on public and casual observation. I have of late frequently sat in an elevated railroad car, when some of the passengers had to stand, and wondered in my inmost soul how some of them continued to do it.
When the car slews around a corner, and equilibrium has to be carefully readjusted, these stilt-supported chaps take the two strands of the legs into a single rope, and seem certain to go down in a heap with it coiled beneath them.
These same fellows, I have no manner of doubt, would sit in the front row of a theatre on a ballet night, and make fun of legs twice as thick and straight as their own. We think a woman has narrowed her skirts unreasonably when she gets them down to three breadths, but I solemnly declare that I saw, this morning, a pair of trousers with legs not an inch more than eleven in girth at the knee—or at the knob which I took to be a knee.

I want to know if the fashionable woman, in her wildest absurdities, ever equalled the fashionable man of to day, with his legs squeezed into such trowers, and a flat hat pressing down on his brain.

How Animals Help Each Other.

Darwin in his "Descent of Man" has many kind things to say about animals.
Social animals, he tells us, perform many little services for each other.
Horses nibble and cows lick each other.
Monkeys pick from each other thorns and burs and parasites. Wolves, and some other beasts of prey, hunt in packs, and aid each other in attacking their victims. Pelicans fish in concert. The Hamadryas baboons turn over stones to find insects, etc., and when they come to a large one, as many as can stand round turn it over together, and share the booty.

Social animals mutually defend each other. Brehm encountered in Abyssinia a great troop of baboons which were crossing a valley; the latter were attacked by the dogs, but the old males immediately hurried down from the rocks, and, with mouths wide opened, roared so fearfully that the dogs precipitately retreated. They were again encouraged to the attack; but by this time all the baboons had re-ascended the heights, excepting a young one about six months old, who, loudly calling for aid, climbed on a block of rock, and was surrounded.
Now, one of the largest males, a true hero, came down again from the mountain, slowly went to the young one, coaxed him, and triumphantly led him away, the dogs being too much astonished to make an attack.

On another occasion, an eagle seized a young monkey, which, by clinging to a branch, was not at once carried off; it cried loudly for assistance, upon which the other members of the troop, with much uproar, rushed to the rescue, surrounded the eagle, and pulled out so many feathers that he no longer thought of his prey, but only how to escape.

The Intelligent Jury.

An Incident Illustrative of the Jury System.
According to a Yazoo City, Miss., correspondent, two colored women, Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Harris, living in the suburbs of Yazoo City, had frequent quarrels over a watermelon vine, which, having been planted upon the property of Mrs. Harris, had grown through the dividing fence and bid fair to soon "bloom across the party walls."

In one of the disputes, more fierce than usual, Mrs. Brown tore up the vine by the roots and threw it in the face of her neighbor, who becoming exasperated, seized an ax and split open the head of her antagonist, killing her instantly.
Mrs. Harris was arrested, and there being no question as to the killing, the only point being to determine as to a verdict of murder or manslaughter.

Judge Graves, who was presiding, took pains to explain most particularly the difference between murder and manslaughter, and that in this case there had been nothing introduced to show any premeditation, and telling the jury as plainly as consistent with his office to bring in a verdict of manslaughter.

The twelve negroes composing the jury withdrew, and, as was expected, almost immediately returned, and when asked for their decision, what was the surprise to hear, "Not guilty."

The Judge appeared no less surprised than the rest, but the prisoner was discharged. As the jury was leaving the court-room the Prosecuting Attorney asked the foreman of the jury how they could have possibly found such a verdict, and asking if they did not think Mrs.
Harris killed Mrs. Brown, and that the Judge as good as told them to bring in a verdict of manslaughter. The intelligent juror replied that they all knew that the woman had killed her friend, but the Judge said it could not be murder, and he would like to know "how it could be manslaughter when they was bof a woman?"

The lawyer had no more to say.

Tit for Tat.

When Nellie Ostrum and Frank Belden, of Pittsfield, Mass., were courting, they found time to talk about the love stories in the magazines, but they did not think that before another summer they would figure in a real love story, with broken vows, scalding tears, revenge, and that sort of thing peppering the romance from beginning to end. It was young Belden's fault. The wedding day having been fixed about six months ahead, Miss Nellie went with her parents to visit relatives in Missouri.
During the few weeks succeeding his sweetheart's departure Belden did his whole duty. He gave up his cigarette, and the money he was saving astonished the whole bank into which it found its way. Then, as the local paper explains, on the sunshine of his love there came a lowering cloud. In other words, Belden began to pay attention to another girl. Miss Nellie's Pittsfield friends lost no time in telling Miss Nellie all about it by post, and in post-haste, and what Belden mentioned as "a scorcher," came in the return mail. The receipt of this scorcher fanned the lover's spark of liking for the new girl into such a flame that he wrote to Miss Nellie breaking off the engagement. That was about the time of the great Mississippi flood, but whether the jilted girl wept such an inland ocean the chronicler of the affair fails to set forth. But in due time Miss Nellie returned to Pittsfield, and to her friends it seemed that all her wedding-cake was betrothal dough. Why Belden again fell head over heels in love with Miss Nellie no one understands; but he did, begged forgiveness, sought reconciliation, and all once more apparently became serene. The wedding day was fixed, and Belden, in his broadcloth, appeared at the bride's house. Miss Nellie met the bridegroom at the door; taking him into the kitchen, where she was steaming strawberries, she said: "Frank, I am to be married next Monday, not today; my future husband is now on his way from Missouri." Belden falls and so does the curtain.

Trying to Kiss His Way Over a Ferry.

Judge Williams, afterward Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of Iowa, possessed valuable and extensive legal acquirements, but was, withal, an invec-erate joker, and never so happy as when he had an opportunity to give his mirth-ful proclivities full exercise. The only person, however, who ever beat him with the tongue was a woman, Mary Hays. The feminine Charon of the Des Moines rather checked his loquacity, when one day he attempted to play off one of his jokes upon her. The Judge was boarding on the east side of the river—bridges existed only in the imaginations of the most enterprising—and in attempting court he crossed to and-fro in a skiff. Sometimes one, sometimes another ferried him over; but once there was no man at hand. Miss Hays, a young, and in all probability a very good-looking lady, was washing near the river bank.

"Mary," said the Judge, "how am I to get across this river?"

"Why, in a skiff, I suppose," Mary quietly replied.

"But there is no one to bring back the boat and I am a very poor rower. Now Mary, really, don't you think you could take pity on a man in such a troublesome predicament, leave your interesting work and volunteer to row me over?

"I'll pay you in any number of kisses you ask; sweeter and heartier ones than you ever received in your life."

"Certainly I'll take you over, but as to kisses, Mr. Judge, I don't want anything of the sort, particularly from such an old scrub as you."

"Oh! I suppose you have had rather a surfeit of that article lately. Has Jim?"

"Now Judge, if you want to go across, just get in and sit still!"

Judge Williams waited until they had got fairly out in the current of the river.
Mary plied the oars as if she had seen sea-service.

"Mary!"

"Sir!"

"Suppose I just turn the boat down stream, carry you off and marry you; would it not be a delightful plan? You would just suit me, and I would you.
Certainly, destiny always intended us for mates, and I suppose a little scheming would be excusable to gain such a lovely prize as you. Here we go now, down the river to New Orleans, or elsewhere."

At this, Mary's provoked spirit fairly glittered in her eyes. With intensity of emphasis, she explained:

"You carry me off? You marry me!
I would not have such an old dried-up crackling!"

"I wouldn't marry you if you were the last man on earth, and a woman couldn't get to Heaven without a husband; and if you don't stop your nonsense, and behave yourself, I'll pitch you head first into the river; and you may make as long a voyage as you please; but one thing is certain, you don't take me with you!"

The Judge, of course, stopped teasing her at this, laughing heartily at her Amazonian threats; and rumor does not say whether he paid his fare in exchange in Cupid's bank or not.
